Working on reserve lands or with Indigenous ownership involves a distinct set of legal requirements and practical considerations.

This session examines how reserve lands are governed differently and what that can mean for procurement, contracting, financing, title and security. Participants will also learn what to clarify before work begins, what to consider when reviewing contracts, and how respectful communication and relationship-building can support stronger project outcomes.

This session is designed for management, owners, procurement professionals, project managers, supervisors and support staff involved in construction projects.
